Analysis

Bill Summary:

Definitions

A "common ownership community" means a condominium; cooperative housing corporation; or a homeowners association (HOA), as those terms are defined in applicable statute, as specified. The bill explicitly excludes a time-share project (as defined in § 11A-101 of the Real Property Article) from the definition.

A “dispute” means a disagreement between at least two parties that involves:

- the authority of a governing body of a COC to (1) require or prohibit any action involving a unit or common element; (2) require any person to pay a fee, a fine, or an assessment; (3) spend COC funds; or (4) alter or add to a common element; or
- the failure of a governing body of a COC to (1) properly conduct an election; (2) give adequate notice of a meeting or other action; (3) properly conduct a meeting; (4) properly adopt a budget or rules; (5) maintain or audit books and records; (6) allow inspection of books and records; (7) maintain or repair a common element if the failure results in significant personal injury or property damage; or (8) exercise its judgment in good faith concerning the enforcement of the governing documents against any person that is subject to those documents.

However, a dispute does not include a disagreement that involves title to any unit or common element; the percentage interest or vote allocable to a unit; the interpretation or enforcement of any warranty; the collection of an assessment validly levied against a party; or the exercise of the judgment or discretion of a COC regarding any legally authorized action.

Baltimore County Local Commission – In General

Membership: If Baltimore County establishes a local commission on COCs, the commission must include members (1) who are owners in a COC and (2) represent certain professions, as specified. The county executive must determine the total number of members of the local commission.

In addition, a designee of the county executive; a designee of the county council; and a designee of a county agency dealing with planning, environment, permitting, transportation, or housing and community affairs must serve as nonvoting members.

The chair and vice chair of the local commission must be elected from among the voting membership of the local commission. The county executive must adopt procedures for the appointment and terms of members; however, a member of the local commission may not serve more than two consecutive terms.

Operating Requirements and Procedures: The local commission must meet at least monthly. A member of the local commission may not receive compensation as a member but is entitled to reimbursement for expenses under the standard county travel regulations.

The local commission must:

- adopt rules of professional conduct as appropriate for members and staff;
- keep a record of its proceedings;
- examine the needs of COCs in the county;
- advise the county council, the county executive, and appropriate State and county agencies on matters relating to COCs; and
- provide training on the responsibilities of the local commission's members to the governing body of a COC by (1) developing an educational curriculum for new members and (2) approving an alternative educational curriculum for new members.

The local commission may:

- employ staff as authorized by the county;
- establish a process for resolving disciplinary matters pending before the local commission through nonjudicial dispute resolution processes;
- develop educational and training opportunities for governing bodies;
- adopt additional bylaws necessary to carry out the business of the local commission; and;
- adopt any additional regulations, procedures, or standards consistent with the mission of the local commission to carry out the requirements of the bill.

If Baltimore County establishes a local commission, the county executive must designate an agency or office to, among other responsibilities:

- disseminate educational materials regarding programs that assist COCs;
- conduct educational programs to promote the operation of COCs;
- maintain information and a referral system for all county services related to COCs;
- provide technical assistance to governing bodies on specified matters;
- advise COCs and professional association managers of changes in the laws and regulations that affect their communities or operations; and
- operate a dispute resolution process to furnish mediation and administrative hearings.

When establishing the local common ownership commission, Baltimore County must require COCs in the county to register with the local commission annually, using a form meeting specified requirements. If a COC fails to register or makes a false statement on the registration form, the entity becomes ineligible to file a dispute.

Local Government Commissions – Dispute Resolution

The local commission may hear any dispute between parties. However, a party may not file a dispute with the local commission until the party has made a good faith effort to exhaust all procedures and remedies provided by the governing documents of the COC. If the governing body of a COC determines that a dispute exists, it must notify the other parties of the option to file the dispute with the local commission.

Current Law: Generally, State statute includes the Maryland Condominium Act, the Maryland Homeowners Association Act, and the Maryland Cooperative Housing Corporation Act, all of which regulate various aspects of COC operations.

For more information on condominiums, HOAs, and cooperative housing corporations, commonly known as COCs, see the Appendix – Common Ownership Communities.

Local Fiscal Effect: The bill does not require Baltimore County to establish a local commission on COCs. However, if the county elects to establish such a commission, the county must abide by the specific guidelines outlined in the bill. Although Baltimore County expenditures likely increase if it establishes a local commission, any impact directly attributable to the bill is only to the extent that, absent the bill’s requirements, the commission established by the county would have differed in a way that may have minimized costs that are likely incurred to meet the bill’s specific requirements.

Appendix – Common Ownership Communities

When a person purchases a single-family home, condominium, or an interest in a cooperative housing corporation, the person may also be required to join an association of owners, which is intended to act in the common interests of all the homeowners, condominium unit owners, or cooperative owners in the community. Collectively, these associations are often referred to as common ownership communities (COCs). In Maryland, a growing number of newly constructed or newly converted residences are located in some form of a COC. Because registration of the various COCs is not required statewide, the exact number of COCs in Maryland is unknown. However, the Foundation for Community Association Research estimated that there were 7,200 community associations with an estimated 1.1 million residents in these associations in the State in 2024.

The affairs of a condominium are governed by a council of unit owners, which comprises all unit owners. Among other powers, the council of unit owners has the power to impose assessments on the unit owners to pay common expenses. A council of unit owners may delegate its powers to a board of directors, officers, or a managing agent. Condominiums are governed under Title 11 of the Real Property Article.

Many new housing developments are subject to a homeowner's association (HOA) that is created by a governing document and has the authority to impose mandatory fees on lots in the development in connection with the provision of services or for the benefit of the lots, the lot owners, or the common areas. HOAs are governed under Title 11B of the Real Property Article.

A cooperative housing corporation or "cooperative" is a corporation that owns real property. A resident of a cooperative does not own an individual unit; instead, the person owns an interest in the corporation, which leases the unit to the person for residential use. Cooperatives are governed by the laws in Title 5, Subtitle 6B of the Corporations and Associations Article.

Condominiums and HOAs may be authorized by their governing documents to impose liens on units or lots to collect unpaid assessments or fees. In a cooperative, the governing documents usually provide for the collection of delinquent fees, and evictions for outstanding fees are generally pursued by way of a landlord-tenant action.
